HOUSING FORECAST WICHITA 2023

We are especially grateful to Security 1st Title and Meritrust Credit Union for underwriting the cost of preparing this year's Wichita Housing Forecast.

We are also grateful to the REALTORS® of South Central Kansas, the South Central Kansas MLS, the Kansas Association of REALTORS® and participating multiple listing services across Kansas for providing much of the data used to prepare this forecast.

Thanks to the many colleagues and friends who have helped make this forecast possible:

ECONOMIC OVERVIEW:

While Wichita employment is still 3.5 percent lower than it was prior to the pandemic, the local labor market is extremely tight. In fact, the Wichita unemployment rate is near its historic low set in the late 1990s. As a result, housing demand continues to remain strong.

After rising sharply during the first half of the year, the 30-year fixed mortgage rate bounced between 5 and 5.5 percent this summer as markets struggled to assess how Fed policy will affect inflation and economic growth. The Mortgage Bankers Association, for one, appears to believe the Fed will navigate a soft landing. They forecast that mortgage rates will fall to 4.9 percent by the end of next year.

HOME SALES AND CONSTRUCTION:

Although rising mortgage rates have softened demand somewhat from earlier in the year, the real constraint on the market remains the lack of inventory. We expect that Wichita-area home sales will end the year down 4.9 percent at 11,560 units. Sales will rebound slightly in 2023, ending the year up 0.7 percent at 11,640 units.

After a decade of building roughly 1,000 new homes a year, single-family permitting activity in the Wichita area rose sharply in 2020. It now appears that 1,500 units is the new “normal” for the market. We forecast that Wichita will end the year with 1,530 new single-family permits, an increase of 5.2 percent. This figure should rise slightly in 2023 to 1,570 units.

HOME PRICES:

To some it might seem like the recent explosion in home prices was due to the pandemic. In reality, it was caused by supply problems that have been building for years. In fact, there were less than half as many homes available for sale at the beginning of 2020 than there were back in 2011.

As a result, Wichita has had less than a 4 months' supply of homes available for sale – often considered the threshold for a sellers' market – since late 2014. Even if there is a significant softening in demand due to higher mortgage rates, it will take a long time for Wichita to return to a balanced market.

The frenzied demand that characterized the market through the early part of this year appears to have eased. Nevertheless, extremely tight inventories will continue to put upward pressure on home prices. We project that Wichita-area home values will end the year up 12.9 percent before slowing to a more-normal but still quite strong appreciation rate of 4.7 percent in 2023.

KANSAS FORECAST:

Home sales have declined this year across most of the state. This was true even before the recent rise in mortgage rates began to soften demand. As a result, we expect sales to end the year at 43,100 units, down 6.9 percent. Home sales should rebound to 44,930 units in 2023, largely due to gains in the Kansas City area.

New single-family building permits in Kansas are expected to decline by 3.9 percent this year. This is largely due to softening in the Kansas City area, as permits are expected to rise in all of the state's other major markets. Construction activity should stabilize in 2023, dropping a modest 0.9 percent to 6,255 units.

Home prices across the state rose by a stunning 14.6 percent last year as surging demand ran headlong into supply constraints that have been building for years. While demand has eased with rising mortgage rates, we still project that Kansas home values will end the year up 12.3 percent. The pace of appreciation should slow next year, to a still-strong 5.4 percent.
